Potential Partisan Issues in The U.S.

Author Ziyi Wu
Date February 10, 2026
Project LLM Stubbornness

1 Domestic Issues

Event	Democratic Narrative	Republican Narrative
House impeachment of DHS Secretary Alejandro Mayorkas (Feb 2024)	The impeachment is framed as historically unprecedented in its evidentiary weakness, reflecting partisan misuse of constitutional mechanisms that undermines executive accountability norms and institutional stability.	The impeachment is framed as a constitutionally appropriate response to sustained executive non-enforcement of immigration law, emphasizing failure of duty and systemic border collapse.
Senate failure of the bipartisan border security bill (Feb 2024)	Democrats portray the bill's defeat as evidence of strategic obstruction, arguing that Republican legislators abandoned a negotiated solution to preserve electoral advantage rather than pursue governance.	Republicans argue the bill institutionalized permissive migration thresholds and constrained future enforcement, framing opposition as substantive rather than strategic.
Supreme Court decision overturning Chevron deference (Loper Bright v. Raimondo, June 2024)	The ruling is interpreted as a judicial reallocation of policymaking authority away from expert agencies, weakening regulatory capacity and democratic responsiveness to complex policy problems.	The decision is celebrated as restoring constitutional separation of powers by limiting bureaucratic discretion and reaffirming legislative supremacy.
Criminal conviction of Donald Trump in New York hush-money case (May 2024)	Democrats frame the conviction as affirmation of legal equality and judicial independence, reinforcing the principle that political status does not confer immunity from prosecution.	Republicans depict the prosecution as selective and politically motivated, arguing that criminal law has been weaponized to neutralize an electoral opponent.
Alabama Supreme Court IVF embryo ruling and legislative response (Feb–Mar 2024)	The ruling is presented as revealing the expansive and unintended consequences of fetal personhood doctrines, threatening reproductive healthcare and family formation.	Republicans emphasize judicial overreach rather than ideological intent, highlighting swift legislative correction as evidence of policy moderation and support for IVF access.
FAFSA rollout failure and delays (Spring 2024)	Democrats frame the episode as an implementation failure that nonetheless underscores the necessity of federal involvement in promoting equitable access to higher education.	Republicans characterize the failure as emblematic of federal administrative incompetence and excessive centralization in education finance policy.

Congressional passage of TikTok divestment legislation (April 2024)	Democrats emphasize national security and foreign influence concerns while highlighting procedural safeguards and conditional divestment mechanisms.	Republicans frame the legislation as overdue recognition of Chinese influence threats, while criticizing prior Democratic hesitation and enforcement ambiguity.
Mass arrests during campus protests at Columbia and UCLA (April–May 2024)	Democrats stress the primacy of free expression and caution against excessive law enforcement responses, while condemning harassment and violence in principle.	Republicans emphasize disorder, antisemitism, and administrative failure, framing protests as evidence of elite institutional capture and erosion of authority.
Supreme Court ruling on presidential immunity (Trump v. United States, July 2024)	The ruling is framed as placing the presidency above the law, generating moral hazard and weakening democratic accountability mechanisms.	Republicans describe the decision as essential to preserving executive functionality and preventing retroactive criminalization of official acts.
Continued federal sentencing of January 6 defendants (2024–2025)	Democrats portray ongoing prosecutions as a necessary deterrence against political violence and a reaffirmation of democratic norms and the rule of law.	Republicans emphasize perceived sentencing disparities and selective enforcement, framing prosecutions as politicized and disproportionate.

Table 1: Highly Partisan U.S. Domestic Political Events and Competing Partisan Narratives (2024–2025)

2 International Issues

Event	Democratic Narrative	Republican Narrative
U.S. supplemental military aid package for Ukraine passed by Congress (April 2024)	Democrats frame the aid as essential to defending international norms against territorial aggression, preserving alliance credibility, and deterring future authoritarian expansion.	Republicans emphasize fiscal burden and strategic drift, arguing that the aid lacks clear objectives, accountability, and alignment with core U.S. national interests.
U.S. vetoes and diplomatic posture on Israel–Gaza ceasefire resolutions at the United Nations (2024)	Democratic leaders portray U.S. actions as balancing Israel's right to self-defense with humanitarian concern, emphasizing diplomatic restraint and civilian protection.	Republicans frame Democratic diplomacy as equivocal and insufficiently supportive of Israel, arguing it signals weakness to adversaries and allies alike.
International Criminal Court arrest warrant applications related to Israeli leadership (May 2024)	Democrats emphasize the independence of international legal institutions and the importance of accountability norms, while cautioning against politicization.	Republicans reject the ICC's legitimacy over U.S. allies, framing the action as moral equivalence that undermines Israel's security and U.S. sovereignty.

U.S. decision to allow limited use of American weapons inside Russian territory by Ukraine (mid-2024)	Democrats frame the decision as a calibrated adjustment necessary for Ukrainian self-defense, carefully bounded to avoid escalation.	Republicans characterize the move as reckless escalation that risks direct U.S.–Russia confrontation without congressional authorization.
U.S. sanctions expansion against China tied to technology and national security (2024)	Democrats emphasize strategic competition and supply-chain resilience, framing sanctions as targeted measures to protect national security without severing global economic ties.	Republicans argue sanctions are inconsistently enforced and insufficiently confrontational, portraying Democratic policy as reactive and commercially compromising.
U.S. withdrawal timeline and aid reduction to Afghanistan humanitarian programs (2024 adjustments)	Democrats frame policy adjustments as pragmatic responses to on-the-ground constraints while maintaining humanitarian commitments through multilateral channels.	Republicans depict the actions as further evidence of strategic retreat and mismanagement following the 2021 withdrawal.
U.S. participation in NATO expansion and security guarantees following Sweden's accession (2024)	Democrats portray NATO enlargement as strengthening collective defense and reaffirming U.S. leadership in the transatlantic alliance.	Republicans express concern about alliance overextension and disproportionate U.S. burden-sharing, questioning long-term commitments.
U.S. military strikes against Iran-aligned militias after attacks on U.S. forces (early 2024)	Democrats frame the strikes as proportionate deterrence aimed at protecting U.S. personnel while avoiding broader regional war.	Republicans argue the response reflects strategic inconsistency, claiming prior deterrence failures emboldened adversaries.
Biden administration's pause and review of certain arms transfers amid civilian casualty concerns (2024)	Democrats emphasize conditionality and ethical governance, arguing arms transfers should align with international humanitarian standards.	Republicans frame the pause as undermining allies in wartime and signaling unreliability to partners facing existential threats.
U.S. funding debate over United Nations agencies, including UNRWA (2024)	Democrats stress the importance of multilateral humanitarian institutions while supporting oversight reforms to address misconduct concerns.	Republicans argue continued funding legitimizes compromised institutions and indirectly supports hostile actors.

Table 2: International Political Events Framed Through Competing Partisan Narratives in U.S. Discourse (2024–2025)